A FRONTIER STORY.

A White Man's "Figuring" Against Indian Cunning.

Directly following the close of the Indian campaign in which the gallant Caster lost his life, there was a year of dangerous pence on the frontiers. I mean by that that while the redskins were supposed to have been thrashed into submission, and while they were apparently at peace, they lost no opportunity to murder helpless people. The whites were bound by honor to observe the peace and to trust them to observe the peace and to trust them to a certain limit, and, knowing this, the more dissatisfied bucks took every ad-crument as a scout and rider, and it was my luck to bring about the capture of four bucks who were guilty of murdering an old man. They were awarang frait when a young warrior named Black Serpent, who was the son of one of the arrested men, sent me word that he would have my life in revence. I was stationed at Fort Hays, and he sent word in by a trader. Black Serpent was an Apache, and was described to me as being about twenty three years of age, strong, fleet and as cunning as a fex. I did not know him by sight, while he doubtless had the advantage of knowing me. In two or three instances when such messages had be on brought in they were accompanied by the further information that the scale or the scale of t awaiting trial when a young warrior named Black Serpent, who was the son of one of the acrested men, sent me word that he would have my life in repanied by the further information that the sander would be at a certain place at a certain hour. The recipient had he schoice to show up and kill or be killed in a fair exchange of shots, or return the message in contempt, and take his chance of being assassinated. Black Serpent gave me no alternative. He meant to catch me off my guard and kill me.

Withe it wasn't very pleasant to have such a threat hanging over aman, I did not worrs much about it, Indeed, the trip again. This had been the way of it, and he had no intention of attacking me during daylight.

I kept on at the same steady pace during the afternoon, halting twice to water my horse. Three times during the afternoon I got sly peops of my pursuer, who kept at a respectful distance, and doubtless chuckled to himself at the thought of being on my trail and unsuspected. I had to make what is called a "dry casup." That is with no water at hand. There was scant herbage for my horse, but I knew he would not wander far, and that no Indian living could stampede him or ride him away. I knew from the actions of the animal as soon as I dismounted that there was another horse near by, while the horse was drinking, the would halt at the spring and wait for me. As soon as he was gone I struck into the timber and circled around to get as close to the mouth of the canyon as possible. The last two hundred feet of the distance I crawled upon my hands and knees.

My horse had stopped by the way to catch up a mouthful of grass here and there, and I got my first look into the timber and circled around to get as close to the mouth of the canyon as possible. The last two hundred feet of the distance I crawled upon my hands and knees.

Hs was all of twenty minutes creeping his last twenty feet, and I sementimes doubted if my eyesight had not deceived me. He was within six feet of the dummy before he detected it, and then he sprang high in the air and uttered his death-whoop, knowing that I was laying for him. He came down in a heap at the crack of my rifle, and he was dead when I got to him. I kept his entire outfil, sending word to his friends what had happened, and that I held myself answerable to them, but no one troubled me about it, even to lay claim to any of the property.

A year later, when things generally were more settled, but with dissalsation of the commandant. He sent word to the I was still in the employ of the Gov-him to limp as if he had gone lame, through needdent. I felt that I was and watching for me. Black Serpent was doing just as I had remooned he would—waiting for night. I intended to make an easy journey of it by riding about forty miles and camping for the night. He knew this would be the way of it, and he had no intention of attacking me during daylight.

him away. I knew from the actions of the animal as soon as I dismounted that there was another horse near by but I built a fire and toasted my meat and had enough water in my canteen to make a cup of coffee.

Black Serpent would not be in a hurry. When an Indian is trailing you he likes to enjoy his triumph. He plays with you as a cat does with a mouse. Ten o'clock watid be soon enough for him, and I sat in plain view of my fire smoking until after nine. Then I smothered the blaze for five minutes, and during this interval rigged up my blankets to make a "dammy." When I retreated into the darkness and looked back, the figure was good enough to deceive any body. Black Serpent would not approach on my trail but from exactly the opposite direction, and I crept away in the darkness until I was fifty feet from the fire.

It was, as near as I could figure it, he was determined to have greated it. But he was determined to have greated it.

It was, as near as I could figure it, about an hour when the young buck came creeping up from the direction santicipated. I'll give him credit for passing over the ground as noiselessly low and let him do all the shooting-
